Coldcard scam letter in the mail

Received this letter in the mail, supposedly from Coinkite (even though the envelope indicates a Michigan origination) begs the question... did Coinkite experience a data breach and now coldcard owners are being targeted? I know this has been going on with Ledger for years. Be careful out there friends!

For the record, we've had no data breaches as we delete personal data after 120 days. It's a phishing scam likely from a different company leak.

Here's a good link that may help clarify:

There's unfortunately nothing we can do about impersonators and phishing scams external to us.

Replied in an hour on a Saturday. Great work

Coldcards rock, thank you

i'm unable to read your linked post without having an x account.

if you had a data breach you don't know about, the customers from the last 120 days would be exposed to it, wouldn't they?

HodlDee • 1mo ago
Mail like this has happened in the past which is why we're confident the data breach is not from us interesting. have you only ever bought coldcards before, or have you bought ledgers/trezors too? maybe the leaked trezor/ledger info dumps are guiding this.

Edit - but I've moved recently and this letter had my new address, so if there was a coinkite leak, it had to happen recently (bought my coldcard last fall) The ledger leak would not have my new address

I imagine that could be the angle of attack then. sorry you got this bs. the fraud domain could probably be reported as fraud <https://phish.report/> op said in another reply that his ledger purchase was from an older address, only coldcard was bought from his current one

opDimitri • 1mo ago

We got a couple of these actually.

In my case, the coldcard was purchased as a gift to me by a person who is completely crypto illiterate and would have no other connection to anything involving crypto. Yet, both letters were addressed to them.

How did they get your address? Aren't they "Supposed" to destroy all KYC info?

I got one of these too. Coldcard is the only hardware wallet I've bought.

the common denominator with op seems to be coinkite then.

I had one like this for trezor land at an old address (and eventually passed to me), was sent from France and used nice quality paper.

Sad thing is that it will have fooled someone.

Sounds like you should report it to the FBI immediately.
